Commentary
7  A Surprising Little War: First Lessons of Mali  François Heisbourg
The challenge for the French in Mali is less that of ‘when do we leave?’ but under what circumstances it makes sense to stay.

19  Women in Combat  Ben Barry
The Pentagon’s decision to remove the direct ground combat exclusion rule for women is more nuanced than often described. Particular specialities or units may still remain closed.

31  Rebalancing the Burden in East Asia  Christian Le Mière
The US rebalance to the Asia-Pacific appears to be failing to either reassure allies or deter China. And there are clear limitations to any new alliance system.

Axis of Accommodation
45  Accommodating China  Amitai Etzioni
America and its allies have little reason to replay the Cold War by seeking to contain China. Accommodating expansion of Beijing’s influence is more likely to lead to a peaceful relationship.

61  China, North Korea and the Spread of Nuclear Weapons  Thomas Plant and Ben Rhode
The threat to Beijing’s interests if North Korean nuclear weapons or materials find their way into the hands of others outweighs the danger of a regime collapse in Pyongyang.

Unseen Assailants
81  The Cyber Attack on Saudi Aramco  Christopher Bronk and Eneken Tikk-Ringas
Infesting the company’s machines with the Shamoon virus required the kind of co-ordination typical of state-sponsored attacks, and the targeting of critical infrastructure shortens the list of suspects.

97  Obama’s Drone War  Trevor McCrisken
The use of unmanned aerial vehicles for targeted killings has extensive ethical, political, legal and strategic implications.
123 America’s Sputnik Moments  Sean Kay
Sputnik jolted the US into major investments in education and R&D. Yet despite repeated external shocks since 1957, America has never again matched this focus on future security requirements.

147 Globalising Iran’s Fatwa Against Nuclear Weapons  Seyed Hossein Mousavian
Transforming the fatwa into a legally binding document could be a face-saving solution to the Iran nuclear crisis and boost efforts towards eliminating nuclear weapons entirely.

Review Essays
163 Can’t Stop the Signal  Jeffrey Mazo
From the financial crisis to terrorist spectaculars, the era of ‘Big Data’ has not led to better predictions. According to Nate Silver in The Signal and the Noise, the fault lies not in our stats but in ourselves.

173 Revolution No. 3  Aline Buysschaert
Jeremy Rifkin’s The Third Industrial Revolution argues that the interaction between the Internet and large-scale renewable energy production will entail profound social, economic and philosophical changes.

179 Looking for Balance  Luca Sanfilippo
A new analysis of the sovereign debt crisis stands out by virtue of its global perspective and its quantitative approach to policy options.

Closing Argument
211 From Boom to Bust to Flight  Niamh O’Sullivan
A frustrated and educated youth is often a catalyst for change, but in Ireland generation after generation has chosen to leave the country rather than take to the streets.
