The Strategic Consequences of Europe's Lost Decade

- 7 Europe's Lost Decade Thomas Wright
Facing economic stagnation which will sap its strength, heighten political tensions and diminish its global role, Europe must dismiss 'muddling through' as an alternative to collapse. Only radical steps can avert a lost decade.
- 29 Europe's Make or Break Moment Robert Kahn and Charles Kupchan
The austerity being doled out to put Europe's house in order is undermining public readiness to accept the deeper union that is needed to redress the region's economic woes.
- 49 Russia, the West and the Integration Dilemma Samuel Charap and Mikhail Troitskiy
By excluding one another from initiatives promoting engagement and integration with post-Soviet states, the West and Russia have created an inadvertent and unnecessary rivalry.
- 63 Germany and the Intervention in Libya Sarah Brockmeier
Germany's abstention on UNSCR 1973 does not signify a weakened commitment to multilateralism or NATO, nor was it a historical fluke. It is simply that, on matters involving military force, Germans need time to have a debate at home.
- 91 Europe's Favourable Isolation Oystein Tunsjø
The global power shift from West to East offers Europe the chance to focus on pressing challenges close to home, and to create a new division of labour in transatlantic relations.

Commentary

- 107 Destroying Syria's Chemical Weapons Mark Fitzpatrick
There are many ways the plan could go wrong, but initially it has worked better than expected. If this positive course continues there will be far-reaching benefits.
- 115 The Possible Revolution of Pope Francis Massimo Franco
The appointment of a new secretary of state and a 'V-8' advisory board have coincided with a new foreign policy activism, but the long-term direction for Vatican governance remains unclear.

On the cover

German Chancellor Angela Merkel speaks with Italian Prime Minister Enrico Letta on the second day of a European Council meeting at the EU headquarters in Brussels in October 2013.

Palliser Prize

The deadline for the £2,500 Palliser Essay Prize is 1 September 2014. See <http://bit.ly/ZBzIFf> for details.

123 Russia's Migration Crisis Ben Judah

As the economy becomes addicted to cheap, unregistered migrant labour, the Putin regime has absent-mindedly reconfigured Russian demography. Rising ethnic politics risks turning into a disaster for the Kremlin.

132 Noteworthy

135 Beyond MAD: Obama's Realistic – but Risky – Effort to Reduce the Role of Nuclear Weapons Seyom Brown

New presidential guidance may, finally, render obsolete the Mutual Assured Destruction paradigm that has structured US nuclear strategy and arms-control policy for over 50 years – if a security dilemma can be avoided.

147 The Middle Way: China and Global Economic Governance Will Shield

Fears that China's rise presents a fundamental challenge to the established order are exaggerated. In some areas Beijing seems determined to challenge the existing system, but it lacks a detailed vision for an alternative.

Review Essays

169 Did Bruce Springsteen Win the Cold War? John A. Gans Jr

Erik Kirschbaum's book on a 1988 concert in East Berlin explores the soft power of hard rock. It was the actions of East German officials, not the Boss's words or music, that had the real impact.

179 The Four Straw Men of the Apocalypse Bruno Tertrais

Ward Wilson's thesis that nuclear weapons lack salience is cogently presented and supported by good sources. For the most part, however, his analysis is unconvincing and flawed.

191 Book Reviews

Culture and Society Jeffrey Mazo | Counter-terrorism Jonathan Stevenson | Europe Hanns Maull

Closing Argument

211 The Economic Schism of the West David P. Calleo

The end of the Cold War opened the way to sharper economic confrontations within the West. Heading off a threatening rupture will require both a better understanding of the past and a broader perspective on the future.
